Letter from York County-- Story of a Mule and a Box Car.

Mr. Editor:

Here I come again. Well, I just can't help it. I can't see my friends of old Lancaster, so I desire to talk with them through your highly esteemed sheet. Well, cotton picking is nearly over. Corn is housed and oats are being sown.

The gypsy mule is still here and is behaving himself much better than at first.

But speaking of mules, reminds me of another mule story. Really, if any of the mules in this country use profane language we have not been able to interpret such. But if such a thing can be, it does seem reasonable to believe that the mule is going to tell you about did a certain provocation use bad language. It was this way. It so happened that a number of the sons of assembled themselves bent on fun, and as determined, there appeared a boy driving a mule that had the appearance of being out of the more warts on him 3 o'clock. Well, the guying the boy by appearance of warty mule and he saw how much the crowd made a wager mule could not move an inch.

locked around the bumper and the boy gave the words. The little mule groaned deeply and squatted—you know how they do—and soon the box car was seen to move off. When well under way the boy said, "wa hoo," but the crowd was making so much noise, that the box car did not hear the boy, but began to move more rapidly. The mule did not appreciate being shoved along so fast and resented the rush of the box car. The crowd became alarmed and began to throw cross-ties and every old thing they could get on the track to prevent a catastrophe, and up walked the boy's "Pap," he got in and got awfully tangled up in the log chain and the mule's legs. Fortunately, there were no bones broken, but the rules of the English Grammar were awfully broken up and ever so many of the Ten Commandments.

Shocking Fate of a Little Girl.

Hartsville special in The State:—The little six-year-old daughter of Mr. Parrott Bell was accidentally shot and instantly killed this afternoon about 4 o'clock. It seems that a brother of ten years of age was standing on a box and reaching for a shotgun on a shelf. The box fell as the gun was discharged, and the lead tore off the top and side of the head of the little girl standing nearby.

Tried to Wreck Shoo Fly Train.

Wilson, N. C., special in the Observer:—Last night an attempt was made to wreck the northbound Shoo Fly train south of this city, by placing obstructions on the track. The engineer saw these luckily in time to avert a serious accident. As it was, the engine was slightly damaged and the train was somewhat delayed.
